

Iplotz is a web based wireframing tool. It's cost is between free-$79. Users are able to try the service free for up to 5 pages. It is highly compatible and works on mac, windows, and linux with flash enabled browsers. Your site map can include several pages with drag and drop abilities to make designing fairly easy. You have the ability link components to other pages as well as external pages. This tool is also helpful for group work because others can be added to the page to comment and modify. It includes the ability to add notes and tasks for group members to make communication easier.

Photoshop is an adobe program that is not made specifically for wireframing, but made for design in general. It does not have interface elements like other wireframe tools can have however it gives the user a lot of design control with it's various editing features. On a list of 20 best wireframing tools it was listed at number 7 and said to be one of the most straightforward and quickest methods for design. Photoshop is widespread and well known by most people in digital design, which allows it to be a simple choice for wire framing.